Making Changes Will Make Improvements

Because lighting is so important, bathroom lighting should be updated when it does not offer enough resource to you. A place to start is with task lighting. Place this over, around or near the mirror in the bathroom. Be sure to place them correctly so that good bathroom lighting is achieved. Also, look at the type of bulbs that you will use. Incandescent or halogen lights are a good option for task lighting as they provide more light than other types. You can also use a dimmer with these bulbs. You can always add more lights and then install dimmers so that you get just the right amount for what you need.

Look Closely

Another option for bathroom lighting is the use of neodymium light bulbs around your vanity. This is a great way for you to get a sunlight type of light into the bathroom. You will want to keep away from recessed lighting near the vanity as these cause a lot of shadow that can distract you. Recessed lighting can be used in other locations in the bathroom but keep it out of places where a lot of light is needed. You may also want to consider adding concave mirrors that are lit near your current main mirror. This is a great source of good light for those that want to have as much light as possible near the mirror for all of those small jobs.

Other Areas In The Bathroom Lighting Plan

The vanity is a main target for lighting needs but do not overlook other areas. For example, that recessed lighting can work well when used in the shower or tub area. Adding several will provide you with enough light and still give that soft glow. When using lights in these water prone areas, be sure to have the right materials including a glass diffuser, shower trim and gaskets. Bathroom lighting is an essential part of creating the perfect room. Do not overlook your bathroom lighting!
